To the Teacher

The supplementary tests on the following pages are intended to be used with students in the Beginning Green Level of the Stevenson Language Skills Program. Specifically, they are designed to be used in conjunction with other Decoding Tests in the Beginning Level Mastery/Management Test Manual and the Beginning Level Mastery/Management Test Booklet. The directions for administering and scoring these tests will be found in that manual, which teachers using these tests should follow.

These tests were developed to give teachers more opportunities to assess the word-attack skills of their students in the Stevenson Program. In recent years, many schools have chosen to administer frequent assessments both to corroborate and to evaluate progress. The original Beginning Level Mastery/Management Test books provide six Decoding Tests and six Comprehension Tests with one of each to be administered at six specific points in the first level. Many schools, particularly those who are following the Response to Intervention model, require teachers to administer some kind of organized evaluation instrument every few weeks, or even weekly. The original six tests would be likely used every four to eight weeks (depending on the degree and nature of the students' learning issues). These supplementary Decoding Tests for the Beginning Green Level offer nine more opportunities, more than doubling the frequency with which assessments can be made.

In the Stevenson Program, these Decoding Tests are considered “mastery” tests because the teacher can identify the specific word elements that cause difficulty and can target them for extra review. Students should not move forward to new word elements until they have “mastered” current material by meeting the criteria as explained in the manual. On the other hand, the Comprehension Tests are considered “management” tests because they reveal learning processes (e.g., visualization of word meaning) that need extra attention, but those processes can be developed while students move forward onto new word elements. Reading comprehension is a far more difficult process to quantify than decoding, and it develops in a more gradual fashion. For these reasons, we do not feel that it is as practical to make frequent assessments of comprehension as it is to track decoding. Therefore, you will only find additional Decoding Tests included in these pages.

The first group of pages that follow are those used to record the student's responses and the teacher's observations. The second group of pages contains the actual lists of words that students must read. (They are coordinated, as you would expect, with both response sheets and word lists using the same number.) Pages 4-8 of the Beginning Level Mastery/Management Test Manual describe how to administer the tests. Tests on these pages which follow Decoding Test 1 in the Manual are labeled tests 1A and 1B, tests which follow Decoding Test 2 in the Manual are labeled tests 2A, 2B, 2C, etc. The tests are not given at exactly even intervals between lessons in the Beginning Green Teacher's Manual (BEG 101), because some lessons will involve more decoding progress than others. The intervals of the tests are determined mostly by the number and difficulty of new word elements. You cannot fit struggling readers into an exact schedule. However, these supplementary tests, when added to the original Mastery/Management Tests, should provide ample opportunities to assess student progress with reasonable frequency and regularity.
